Delegate enthusiastically
I want to thank my fellow officers, directors and committee chairs for all their hard work. I am fortunate to be surrounded by so many talented and dedicated individuals. As a result of their efforts, our move forward as a Chapter was great.

Bruce Liebel’s leadership was on display with our very successful Buffalo/Niagara Spring Institute. This inaugural event showcased Bruce’s many talents. I look forward to working with him as he assumes the Chapter’s presidency. We are in good hands.

Larry Nowak managed with diligence and pride two thankless, but important Chapter tasks - the annual Chapter Directory and the quarterly Fine Print. His attention to detail is unmatched. The results speak for themselves.

Jennifer Dunn organized my most rewarding event this past year. Our Day of Caring at the Heart and Soul Soup Kitchen in Niagara Falls helped over 150 families at Christmas. Jennifer’s community service aptitude is contagious.

Thank you for the opportunity to serve you.

Best regards,

John P. Eichner

SAVE THE DATE – HFMA’S ANNUAL BANQUET

By Bruce K. Liebel, President-Elect

It’s Back! A survey completed in January showed much interest by our membership in returning to the ‘good ol’ days’ — an annual banquet, complete with dinner, music and dancing.

Please join us on the evening of FRIDAY, JUNE 1, 2007 at Classics V, where we will honor our President, John P. Eichner, CHFP, CPA, for his leadership this past year, and for the installation of the Officers and Board of Directors for the 2007-08 year.

More details are included in the invitations that were sent to our members and sponsors. Don’t miss this night of fun – with music by Penelope, featuring HFMA’s own Russ Previte on drums.

See You There!
Examining and Addressing CDHPs
By The Academy of Healthcare Revenue

If your organization is experiencing an increase in insured patients’ residual self-pay balances, you are not alone. Many facilities across the country are now faced with the task of collecting more dollars from patients, at least until patients’ deductibles are met—deductibles which are consistently growing each year due to individuals’ enrollment in consumer-driven health plans.

CDHPs, typically high-deductible insurance policies with tax-advantaged savings accounts such as health savings accounts (HSAs), continue to gain more share in the health insurance market each year. One primary reason for the influx of these types of plans is employers’ desire to lower their health insurance costs, which have increased by an average of nearly 12 percent in the last five years. In particular, CDHPs have become attractive to employers and employees because of the plans’ lower premium growth, often five percent less than traditional PPO and HMO plans.

According to research, in 2006 the average deductible for an HSA-qualified consumer-driven health plan was more than $2,000 for single coverage—an amount significantly larger than the smaller dollar amounts that hospitals have become accustomed to seeing, and that patients have become accustomed to paying out-of-pocket. Additionally, many of these plans do not have the smaller co-pay amounts (e.g., $50) that patients have historically been charged for visits to hospital emergency departments, or for tests such as MRIs. Patients are likely to be fully financially responsible for the costs of non-preventive care until deductibles are met—known as ‘first-dollar’ coverage—and may also have co-insurance responsibilities (e.g., patients pay 20 percent of costs above and beyond the deductible until their out-of-pocket maximum limits are reached).

Ultimately, providers may need to allocate more resources toward collecting self-pay receivables, especially for patients enrolled in CDHPs who are relatively healthy and do not seek enough care to reach their annual deductibles. Industry leaders have noted that patients with CDHPs are not the same as traditional insured patients—in actuality, they are self-pay patients up to a very high deductible.

In order to effectively identify and prepare for CDHPs’ impact on your organization, it may be necessary to proactively assess the insurance market in your area to determine if—and in many cases, when—payers and employers will partner together to enroll more individuals in consumer-driven plans. Payers and employers are not likely to seek out your organization and inform you of their CDHP plans, and patients’ insurance cards may not explicitly mention their enrollment in CDHPs either. Instead, as a revenue cycle leader you may need to stay informed by examining advertisements, other media, and news items in your communities that can alert you to CDHP offerings.

Payers and employers may also need to be contacted to determine the extent of which individuals are enrolling in CDHPs. By contacting employers and carefully tracking and trending the high-deductible accounts in your organization’s patient accounting system, you will become better able to statistically project how many potential patients have consumer-driven, high-deductible plans. In turn, this will enable you to identify if CDHPs are gaining a share of the market in your area, and if dedicated strategies are needed to ensure accounts featuring these types of plans do not cause a significant strain on your organization’s financial health.

In particular, best-performing facilities have responded to the rise of CDHPs (and patients’ residual self-pay balances) with two main areas of focus. The first is re-examining and in some cases adjusting the discounts contracted payers receive, especially if a significant portion of the payer’s enrollees are enrolled in high-deductible plans. Historically, third-party payers have received discounts because they reimburse hospitals in a timely manner—often within 15 – 30 days of service. However, if more and more of payers’ patients are enrolled in plans that increase patients’ out-of-pocket amounts and ‘first-dollar’ responsibility, essentially hospitals are then providing payers with discounts to collect from patients what was previously payers’ financial responsibility.

Second, the rise of CDHPs emphasizes the importance of collecting at point of service—ideally, patients’ entire estimated balances up to their deductible limits—in order to reduce the risk of increased bad debt. Academy research shows that approximately one-third of providers have not implemented POS collections at their facilities; if you are concerned about the impact of high-deductible, consumer-driven plans, now may be the time to consider (or re-consider) this practice.

While the number of employers offering CDHPs is on the rise, as is the number of enrollees, the impact of these plans are not likely to be fully known until many more patients enroll. Meanwhile, it is important for leaders to strategically respond to the implications that are known in order to protect their organizations’ future financial health.

Kennedy, Dingell Introduce Bill to Provide Medicare for All

The goal of Medicare for All is to address many of U.S. healthcare’s greatest challenges by providing universal coverage within five years through a three-stage phase-in, benefits equivalent to those available to senators and representatives, choice of enrollment in Medicare or private plans through a plan similar to the one available to federal employees, financing through a payroll tax that will reduce average employer healthcare expenses, and incentives to improve quality and bring IT to medical care.

“We applaud Senators Kennedy and Dingell for focusing attention on providing universal coverage. This issue has been on the back burner of Congress for much too long,” said Richard L. Clarke, DHA, FHFMA, president and CEO of HFMA. “The idea of ‘Medicare for All,’ however, seems to be a ‘one size fits all’ approach to this problem. The issues of providing coverage for the uninsured and underinsured are very complex, and one size may not fit all. We need an approach that keeps the best parts of our pluralistic system of delivery and payment while dealing with the real problems of access for the uninsured and cost.”

BUFFALO/NIAGARA SPRING INSTITUTE

By Bruce K. Liebel, President-Elect

WE DID IT! With planning that began last year, and despite conflicting sessions with the Attorney General and NCAA Basketball tournament that hindered our attendance, more than 50 attendees gathered at the Adam’s Mark Hotel in Downtown Buffalo on March 15th for our inaugural Spring Institute.

The session started with a bang with our Keynote Speaker, comedian Kent Rader (a former CFO/Controller), with his talk on “Laughter Matters”. The evaluations included comments such as, “Good Opener – Set A Great Mood”, “Wonderful Start to the Day”, “Very Good Speaker; Funny and Still Gets His Points Across”, “Awesome Speaker”, “He is an Excellent Stress Reliever. Good Advice to Use Daily!”, and “Great Way to Start off the Institute”.

In regards to the speaker’s ‘Presentation Ability’, EVERY SINGLE evaluation gave him a perfect 5!

The break-out sessions came next with Robin Bradbury from re|solution speaking about “Ten Questions Leaders Should Be Asking About the Revenue Cycle”. Comments included: “Very useful session” and “Excellent Presentation with Useful Information to Take Back”, along with several comments that more time was needed. Running concurrently was Charlie Robinson from MedQuist, leading a session on “Patient Financial Services and HIM: Working Better Together”, which was noted to be “A Good Presentation”.

The second breakout sessions had Dean Rossiter from the Wellington Group speaking on “How to Maximize Medicare Reimbursement Through APC’s”, where an attendee noted it provided “useful ideas to take back”, while Ron Leazer from MedQuist joined Charlie Robinson on “Revenue Cycle Repair – A Look at the Middle”, with “Useful Info to All”.

After a great lunch, attendees were treated to a high energy session on “Maximizing Human Capital – Building Revenue Cycle Teams of Excellence”, presented by Tamie Osborn and Bobette Gustafson (President) of Gustafson & Associates. Comments received at this dynamic session included: “Great Speakers & Presenters”, “Would be an Excellent Program for an Entire Management Team”, “Excellent; Good Info”, “Great Session – Both Speakers Provided Numerous Tips – Great Energy for an Afternoon Session.”

The day ended with a Network Reception sponsored by 5 of the local hospitals and the refreshments were enjoyed by those who attended.

Our thanks to all those who contributed in planning and running the 2007 Institute. Overall, the Institute was deemed to be a success, as it provided attendees with an enjoyable day of education sessions. In addition, we plan on making the 2008 Buffalo/Niagara Spring Institute even better!
